

Sprouting the Seeds of Awareness through Art

Art is a unique way of expressing the world's beauty. Art serves as a reminder of why the planet and its resources must be preserved for the sake of the human race and future generations, along with all the other organisms that inhabit the earth. The world carries the burden of having to provide for a vast array of life that lives off the limited resources it provides. After many years, the earth now faces the challenge of climate change due to the unrestricted harvesting of its natural resources, CO2 emissions, and human ignorance.

As of now, the climactic point of the planet's story has been reached. Climate change is the next vicissitude that threatens the world's very existence with the many life forms that are currently dependent on it. Ignorance, greed, and negligence presume to be the deadly culprits that have contributed to this present issue. This now seems to have caught up with the human race as time took its course. People fail to realize that big, powerful corporations continue to drain the Earth of what resources still remain, which is accompanied by massive quantities of CO2 emissions that are deteriorating the ozone layer. Now action is the only answer to this global problem. Motivation and inspiration can help bring about what must be done. Art can help to mobilize this by spreading awareness across the globe.

Awareness presents itself as a bright beacon of hope far off in the distance among all the distractions that present themselves in the daily lives of people. Its luminous light can be fueled by art that can be the power behind it. Art presents itself as an outlet that everyone can access whether it be music, paintings, sculptures, or forms of literature. This activity allows people to amplify the message about climate change through creativity, emotion, and distinct perspectives.

Now, more than ever, art can act as the gateway to combating climate change through spreading awareness.

Art can act as the catalyst that can help bring about the preservation and protections of the world's riches' along with eliminating environmental destruction before it's too late. In order to successfully overcome the crisis that now draws attention, everyone must unify or climate change will only worsen. Art can serve as a constant reminder of why climate change must be stopped. The painting "Giant Redwood Trees of California", by Albert Bierstadt, reveals the priceless beauty of redwood trees while evoking strong emotions. How could mankind forfeit these jewels of the world without taking into account their unsurpassed grandeur and vital role on this planet? A shift in consciousness is required to overcome the ignorance that plagues a majority of the population. If people can't put a stop to the destruction of the environment that's caused by their activities and keep idly waiting till this issue worsens, then the following events will occur: a rise in sea levels, the extinction of many species due to the inability to quickly adjust to the rising temperatures, floods, and droughts. Children must be the epicenter of this movement and must learn why taking care of the planet is vital; art can be integrated into this process to show what the world has to offer and what is at risk.

Undoubtedly, art can promote awareness across the globe, therefore allowing people to make a difference in the world united as one. The fate of the world lies at the door, whether this door is answered may decide the future of the planet along with the beings of life whose very essence depends on it.